(II) Social theorists have claimed that digital natives learn differently and need special teaching strategies that include various forms of multimedia. (III) Despite the significant resources allocated to integrating technology in the classroom, many teachers struggle with disruptions that devices cause and usually find them inefficient. (IV) However, a study recently published in the journal Teaching and Teacher Education states that the concept of digital native is a myth. (V) It argues that there is no evidence to reinforce the claim that "digital natives" who have grown with smartphones and the Internet are better with technology or learn differently as compared to the older generation.

61. (I) Social scientists have been asking for decades whether boastful, self-aggrandizing beliefs and behaviors are beneficial to those who make such claims. (II) According to one school of thought, claiming to be better than others feels good, and when we feel good, we are happier and better adjusted. (III) This argument suggests that bragging to others can satisfy the motive to build and maintain a positive self-image. (IV) According to another line of research, however, consistently viewing oneself as superior entails a distortion of reality. (V) As with many skills and abilities in life, with practice, there can be improved recognition and response to these distortions.

62. (I) Research shows that playtime with parents is important for children's development, and parents are encouraged to find time to play with their kids on a regular basis. (II) Peekaboo is an adorable game parents have played with their young children for generations. (III) Now, however, researchers are looking for a scientific answer to explain why children think they actually disappear when they cover their eyes while playing it. (IV) Researchers led by James Russell at the University of Cambridge have carried out the first study into this bizarre trait with groups of three and four-year-old children. (V) The children's eyes were covered with masks and they were then asked whether they could be seen by the researchers - with most saying no.

63. (I) Privately owned vehicles are often blamed for chronic traffic congestion, especially in the prime business and retail centers. (II) To curb the growth of private car numbers, some people have called for the improvement of public transport in the city. (III) Better road-based public transport services, however, may encourage more people to use them, and as a result, will lead to more traffic on the roads. (IV) They may think that better and more convenient public transport services should encourage people to ditch their cars for the train, bus or taxi, but they ignore the fact that each of these has its own limitations. (V) For example, the subway system cannot be expected to extend to every corner of the city.

64. (I) Prior to the nineteenth century, the Ottoman government took censuses and conducted land and property surveys after each new territory was conquered. (II) While conquering new land, the Ottomans exhibited a degree of toleration and justice. (III) However, this tradition was apparently abandoned in the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. (IV) Until the nineteenth century, the Ottoman government never created a systematic population registration system to record births, deaths, and migrations. (V) For the first time, Mahmut II however developed a reasonably efficient system for counting the population of the Empire and started a census to create a new army in 1826.

In quite possibly one of the biggest mix-ups in award show history, presenters Warren Beatty and Faye Dunaway accidentally declared the wrong winner for Best Picture at the 2017 Oscars, naming La La Land instead of Moonlight. However, after the film's cast and crew walked to the stage in excitement, it was quickly announced that there had been a mistake, and that Moonlight was the actual winner of the prestigious award. Understandably, the people behind both films were floored. The latter film's cast and crew joined the La La Land team on stage, obviously in shock over the mix-up. Meanwhile, team La La Land could be seen consoling one another over the brutal mistake. Based on the evidence available so far, it appears that Beatty and Dunaway were given the incorrect envelope before taking the stage, as when Beatty opened the envelope, he paused for a long few seconds, and looked at Dunaway, puzzled. However, Dunaway took the envelope and dubbed La La Land as the victor, a story Beatty later confirmed while trying to explain the mix-up.

66. It is clear from the passage that the cast and crew of La La Land ----.

- A) invited the actual winner of the Best Picture award to the stage
B) tried to conceal their frustration upon hearing the mix-up
C) were on stage when the Moonlight team came to get their award
D) accused Beatty and Dunaway for getting the wrong envelope
E) publicly condemned the brutal mistake after the ceremony

67. It is understood from the passage that Warren Beatty-----.

- A) avoided providing any explanation for the big mix-up
- B) announced the wrong film as the winner of Best Picture
- C) asked Dunaway to take the envelope and read out the winner
- D) did not expect that Moonlight would win the award
- E) got confused when he read what was inside the envelope

African elephants are on the decline. Throughout history, the human desire for ivory – used in products from jewelry to piano keys to priceless religious art objects – has far outmatched efforts to stop the killing of African elephants for their tusks. Large-scale illegal hunting is threatening populations across the continent to answer the global demand for ivory. In fact, the Africa's elephant population has devastatingly decreased from 26 million elephants in 1800 to fewer than one million today due to the ivory trade. This trade fuels militant groups that poach elephants and smuggle ivory for income. Lack of governmental control causes illegal ivory to enter the legal market with relative ease, for example in South-Asian countries, to which illegal ivory is shipped from Africa. While some countries have banned the domestic trade of ivory completely, many are yet to take this step. However, urgent action is needed to prevent the number of African elephants from dropping critically low.

68. The underlined word "dubbed" is closest in meaning to ----.

- A) graded
- B) rented
- C) labelled
- D) explored
- E) signalled

69. What does this passage mainly focus on?

- A) The number of African elephants across the continent
- B) The ivory trade as a source of income for militant groups
- C) The use of ivory in making various types of products
- D) The need for actions to stop the illegal trading of ivory
- E) The reasons why elephant poaching is increasing in Africa

70. It is understood from the passage that African elephants ----.

- A) have always attracted the attention of poachers who kill them for their tusks
- B) are at risk of extinction as there are no efforts to protect these vulnerable species
- C) are hunted illegally all over the world to meet the demand for ivory
- D) are an endangered species with a dwindling population of 26 millions
- E) are poached as they are regarded as a threat to the human populations

It's no secret that today's families are busier than ever. Parents often juggle work along with kids' school schedules, play dates, and extracurricular activities. As a result, more meals are eaten on the go. In fact, more than half of food expenditures in the United States are spent outside of the home, and children get an average of 25% of their calories from restaurant foods and beverages, according to Public Health Advocates. The shift away from home-cooked meals may mean higher consumption of calories and sugary drinks, as well as challenges in accessing healthy foods. However, new California legislation makes consuming healthy drink options easier for kids and families while eating on the go. The SB 1192 bill makes healthy beverages – water, sparkling water, flavoured water with no added sweeteners, and milk – the default beverages for children's meals at restaurants. While families can still ask for beverages such as soft drinks, lemonade, and fruit-flavoured juices, the law pushes children and families to make healthy choices.

71. According to the passage, ivory trade is ----.

- A) strictly controlled in South-Asian countries
- B) outlawed by some countries within their borders
- C) not a reason why elephant population is in decline
- D) an important source of revenue for governments
- E) relatively challenging between Africa to South-Asia

72. It is clear from the passage that ----.

- A) people tend to prefer work over their responsibilities as a parent
- B) modern-day lifestyle of parents leads children to consume unhealthy foods
- C) foods at restaurants are 25% higher in calories than home-cooked meals
- D) children are exposed to too many sugary beverages at school
- E) people spend more than half of their income on food expenditures

73. The SB 1192 ----.

- A) offers healthy drinks such as sparkling water at restaurants
- B) advises families to consume more food and drinks at home rather than outside
- C) makes healthy foods easily accessible by children
- D) prohibits the sale of soft drinks for kids at restaurants
- E) aims to support families in making healthy choices

Bangladesh has made remarkable progress in reducing poverty, supported by sustained economic growth. Based on the international poverty line of $1.90 per person per day, poverty declined from 44.2 percent in 1991 to 13.8 percent in 2016-17. In parallel, life expectancy, literacy rates, and per capita food production have increased significantly. Progress was underpinned by 6 percent plus growth over the decade and reaching to 7.3 percent in 2016-2017, according to official estimates. Rapid growth enabled Bangladesh to reach the lower middle-income country status in 2015. In 2018, Bangladesh met the eligibility criteria for graduation from the United Nation's Least Developed Countries (LDC) list, and it is on track to graduate in 2024. However, sustained economic growth has increased the demand for energy and transport, and prompted urbanization. Insufficient planning and investment have resulted in increasingly severe infrastructure bottlenecks. To achieve its growth aspiration of becoming an upper-middle income country by its 50th anniversary in 2021, the country needs to urgently implement structural reforms, expand investments in human capital, increase female labor force participation, and raise productivity through increased global value chain integration.

75. It is understood from the passage that Bangladesh ----.

- A) reached the international poverty line in 2017
- B) decreased food production per person in 2016
- C) made progress below six percent in 2016-17
- D) is planning to get out of the LDC list in 2024
- E) became a middle-income country in 2015

76. Sustained economic growth ----.

- A) decreased life expectancy among people
- B) reached 44.2 percent between 2016 and 2017
- C) reduced the need for energy in the country
- D) eased the transportation in urban areas
- E) led onto the unplanned growth of cities

77. In order to become an upper-middle income country, Bangladesh should ----.

- A) increase the number of infrastructure bottlenecks
- B) stimulate investments in people and their skills
- C) have more women in the workforce
- D) put structural reforms into effect immediately
- E) participate in value chains to boost productivity

Faced with a population that is shrinking and ageing, Chinese policymakers are attempting to engineer a baby boom after more than three decades of a Malthusian family planning regime, better-known as the one-child policy. Central policy planners have loosened restrictions on family sizes, and now all married couples can have two children. There are now subsidies and incentives for parents, but these efforts appear to be too little too late. Birthrates have fallen and are likely to continue to drop as parents decide against having more children. More young women are pushing back against state propaganda and family pressure, while improving education standards and income levels have delayed marriage and childbirth. Moreover, decades of the one-child policy have made single-child households the norm. Considering all these, demographers warn that China's population will begin to shrink in the next decade, and by 2050, as much as a third of the country's population will be made up of people over the age of 60, putting severe strain on state services.

78. It is clear from the passage that Chinese policymakers ----.

- A) want to create a baby boom for the next three decades
- B) impose tight restrictions on family sizes
- C) do not allow unmarried couples to have children
- D) ignore the problem of its shrinking population
- E) operated the one-child policy for over thirty years

79. According to the passage, which of the following CANNOT be a reason why China may not be able to stop its population from shrinking?

- A) Couples do not think that the subsidies and incentives that are offered are sufficient.
- B) People do not want to have more than one children, which reduces birthrates.
- C) Women resist being pressurized by their families and the state to have children.
- D) Chinese people have gotten used to the single-child households.
- E) The well-educated Chinese get married and have children at a later age.

80. Which could be the best title for this passage?

- A) What is the one-child policy in China?
- B) How did the one-child policy help China?
- C) Can China recover from its one-child policy?
- D) How do the Chinese react to the one-child policy?
- E) Does China's one-child policy shrink its population?
